A BRIEF HISTORY OF THE MARLBORO HIGH SCHOOL/ELEMENTARY SCHOOL

People and groups with an interest in the history of our County have recently been alerted to the proposed demolition of the building known as OMES – the Old Marlboro Elementary School, the original part of which was built as the Marlboro High School in 1921. The proposal includes the construction (on the site of this school building) of a Family Justice Center that would combine all of the offices necessary to serve individuals and families in need of assistance. There are of course serious logistical problems that would have to be resolved before proceeding with such a plan, but the Historical Society will concentrate on the historical value of the school building and site, and the consideration of potential adaptive re-use and possible preservation. The Society’s Board plans to host as soon as possible an informational meeting and discussion on the subject. The property has been designated an Historic Site under the County’s Preservation Ordinance, because of its importance in the history of education of the white students of the area. It contains not only the High School/Elementary School building, but also the separate, adjoining small principal’s residence (originally 1890s girls’ school), and the burial place of Dr. William Beanes and his wife.

This is the property on which Dr. William Beanes lived in the early 19th century. Dr. Beanes was the Upper Marlborough resident who was taken as a hostage by the British invaders in the summer of 1814, because he and several of his friends had captured several British deserters/stragglers. (He was taken to Baltimore, and it was during the attempts of Francis Scott Key to liberate Dr. Beanes, that Key wrote the lyrics to what became our National Anthem.) Dr. Beanes returned to Upper Marlborough, and lived on this property until his death in 1828; he and his wife are buried on the property, and their burial place has been carefully preserved, although it is currently in need of attention.

After Dr. Beanes’ death, his house was altered to become the new Marlborough Academy, established in 1835 by an Act of the General Assembly of Maryland. The subjects taught included Dictionary, Geography, Latin, algebra, Geometry, and Cyphering; Greek and French studies were soon added. Hours were 8:00 a.m. to 5:30 p.m., and September was vacation month. At first only boys were admitted, but by 1840 there were female students as well; a report for 1844 indicates the attendance of 42 boys and 18 girls. (In 1867, after the establishment of the Board of County School Commissioners, a separate public school for girls was established immediately east of the academy building, and the two buildings were separated by a “good and substantial fence.”)

In July of 1855 the Academy building burned to the ground. The Upper Marlborough newspaper, The Planters’ Advocate, reported that “The buildings of the Marlboro’ Academy, in this place, were destroyed by fire on the afternoon of last Friday. . . . The fire originated in the garret room of the Academy proper, whence it communicated to the adjoining dwelling of the Principal. The latter was not occupied at the time but was in a state of repair – a considerable sum having been already expended in refitting it, all of which is of course a loss. The fire was not discovered until between 6 and 7 o’clock, and no signs of it were observed at the time school was dismissed about two hours previously. . . . The dwelling portion of the building was one of the oldest houses in the village and was for many years the dwelling of the late Dr. William Beanes.” The building had fortunately been insured, and a new academy building was erected by the end of December in that year.

We have several contemporary descriptions of the Academy during the 19th century, the most charming being the reminiscences of Frederick Sasscer, Superintendent of Schools for Prince George's County, and Editor of the Upper Marlborough newspaper, the Prince George's Enquirer. Towards the end of 1920, Editor Sasscer was temporarily confined to bed, and he used the time to write and publish in his newspaper “reminiscences “ of his childhood in Upper Marlborough in the years just after the Civil War. “My little heart fluttered with excitement when, without warning, on a bright autumn morning in 1863 my father announced at the breakfast table that I, the eldest child, was to begin my school career. Accordingly, he led me to Academy Hill and introduced me to Mr. Edward Bushell unto whose tender mercies I was committed . . . my father took leave and I well remember how I cried when I realized I could not return home with him . . . . soon I became a part of that little school circle . . . . by the next day I had grown big enough and brave enough to go to school and return all by myself.” [Young Frederick Sasscer lived at Kingston, just a short distance south of Academy Hill. The Academy building that he attended had been built only eight years earlier to replace the old Beanes residence that had been destroyed by fire.]

Editor Sasscer continued, “The Academy building then consisted of two rooms, one of which was the school room and the other the bed room of the professor. . . . His classes, wonderful to tell, ranged from boys learning the alphabet, the first step in education, then to classes in Cicero and Xenophon. . . . The furniture was of the rudest kind. Desks with sloping lids in sets of three, in all about 30, were arranged against the walls. . . . The very small boys, who had no writing to do, found resting places on two long benches with backs. There were no blackboards, no free books and few physical comforts. The old professor sat at a small table in an arm chair, and was always supplied with a goodly number of supple rods, for the rod was not spared in those primitive days.”

Sasscer went on to contrast the simplicity of his mid-19th-century schooling with the improvements that he had seen by 1920 (he had served as Superintendent of Prince George's County schools 1902-1914, and had been an innovative and progressive leader), and he noted that Upper Marlboro would soon have a new high school. He referred also to the fact that in 1908 the Academy property had been turned over to the Board of County School Commissioners, and that this 1855 building had thenceforward been used as a public high school—“. . . the trustees and patrons of the Marlboro Academy desire the establishment of a High School at the County Seat . . . it is ordered that a committee be appointed . . . with authority to enter into an agreement whereby the property of said Academy . . . may be used for said proposed High School to be established under the provisions of the General School Law relating to the opening of High Schools.” In 1920, Mr. Sasscer recalled that transition, which had occurred during his tenure as superintendent, and looked forward to the construction of the new high school which would be completed in the following year. “The old Academy lost its identity about twelve years ago, when the property was turned over to the School Board in order that the present High School might be established, and our boys and girls alike might enjoy the benefits of instruction in the higher grades. . . . May the new High School building soon to be erected embody in its conveniences all the comforts of the new age, and may the children of the present generation and of generations to come find keen delight and rich enlightenment within its walls!”

The Mission-style two-story high school of 1921 can still be seen at the rear of the present building, Built by Thomas H. Maraden for $38,000, it was of masonry construction, coated with white-painted cement, and distinguished by a handsome shaped parapet on its south entrance façade. It had eight classrooms, offices and a library, as well as rooms for manual training and home economics. The new school was dedicated on May 19, 1921, with considerable ceremony, and a lengthy speech about the very historical Academy that it was replacing. Soon after the high school opened, elementary school classes also began in the new building. During the 1930s, the building was significantly enlarged - a large red-brick addition including eight more classrooms and an auditorium was built, wrapping around and hiding the south entrance façade of the original 1921 structure. In the 1940s, the original 1921 building was used to house the elementary students, while the newer red-brick structure operated as the High School. After the construction of Frederick Sasscer Junior/Senior High School in 1947, the older students moved to that new school, and elementary school classrooms took up the entire structure on Academy Hill. Known now as the Old Marlboro Elementary School, this building was closed by the early 1970s. For years after that, it served as the office of the Sheriff's Department.

From 1835, when the Marlborough Academy was established, until the 1970s, this site has been an important educational landmark in the County Seat. We will keep you posted as plans for its site unfold.

CIVIL WAR EXHIBITS AT UNIVERSITY OF MARYLAND

A new exhibit at the University of Maryland shows the connections between the university and the Civil War, which started just two years after the university’s beginnings.

Did the "Old South Ball" really occur when Confederate soldiers camped on the grounds of the Maryland Agricultural College, as the University of Maryland was then known? How many students left school to fight for the Union, and how many made the long and harrowing trek south to join the Rebel forces? "A College Divided," mounted by the University of Maryland Archives to commemorate the 150th anniversary of the war's beginning, answers these and other questions.

"I knew that many of our students left to fight, and many of our presidents after the war had served in the Confederate military, but I wanted to learn more about the roles these individuals played in the war," says University Archivist Anne Turkos. "Malissa Ruffner, one of our archivists, specializes in genealogical research. She traced the stories of members of the college community—students, faculty, administrators, and trustees—who were affected by the war in some way."

Ruffner assembled some very dramatic tales of the profound impact the conflict had on the young institution. She began by comparing an 1859 student register to military service records, identifying about 30 students who served in the war. These students were joined by professors, presidents, and founding trustees, who served in the military or were directly connected to the war in some way. She found spies and scouts, heroes and foot soldiers.

For example, the founder of the Maryland Agricultural College, Charles Benedict Calvert, supported the war to preserve the Union, but at the same time was part of the southern planter society. Samuel Boyer Davis, who enrolled in the MAC on October 20, 1859, two weeks after the college opened, was in charge of the notorious Andersonville prison in Georgia for one month at the tender age of 20 and later narrowly escaped death by hanging following his conviction for spying for the South.

One of the panels tells the story of the southern-sympathizing Waring Family of Prince George's County. It is illustrated by an image from the John Burroughs diary recently acquired by the Prince George’s County Historical Society and shared with University Libraries for the exhibit.

"I contacted Susan Pearl during our research and we were thrilled that she had just transcribed an entry from Burroughs’ diary that referred to the funeral of young Bob Waring, a MAC student who left school to enlist in the Confederate army," said Ruffner.

"A College Divided: Maryland Agricultural College and the Civil War" is on display in the Audrey Armistead Ruckert Reception Foyer of the Hornbake Library on the University of Maryland, College Park, campus through July 13, 2012. Free and open to the public during the library's open hours (Monday - Thursday, 8 a.m. - 10 p.m., Friday, 8 a.m. - 6 p.m., Saturday, 12 noon - 5 p.m., Sunday 1 p.m. - 10 p.m.). The exhibition complements the show in the Maryland Room Gallery, "Women on the Border: Maryland Perspectives of the Civil War."

The University Park Historic Preservation Association has invited the Historical Society to join them on an archivist-guided tour of these two exhibitions on Sunday, January 29. The tour begins at 2:00 PM in Hornbake's Maryland Room, just inside the library's main entrance. Free parking is available in the Regent's Drive parking garage, adjacent to the library. There is no charge for this tour, but space is limited. For more information, write Chris Garcia at urbanipm@gmail.com.

If you are unable to attend the January 29 tour, the Historical Society is also planning a tour in the spring. Details will be provided once they are finalized.

HISTORIC PRINCE GEORGE’S COUNTY: A CONFLUENCE OF CULTURES

The Historical Society’s latest publication, Historic Prince George’s County: A Confluence of Cultures, is now available for purchase. The authors, George D. Denny, Jr., Nathania A. Branch Miles and Donna L. Schneider, created a book that blends the county’s cultural history with the heritage of businesses who make their home here.

Photographs from personal collections of county residents, as well as photos that are not as widely known, are arranged throughout the book and highlight the diversity of our county. The book explores the culture of who we are and where we live, the culture of work, education and pastimes. The book does not cover every aspect of our rich and varied culture, but will hopefully bring back some fond memories, educate about our today, and show what our future might hold.

We are offering the book for sale at the introductory price of $39.95, a savings of $10 off the cover price, until February 29, 2012. Maryland residents must add 6% sales tax for a total cost of $42.35. If you are willing to pick-up the book at the DeMarr Library in Greenbelt, the offices of Petro Design/Build in Bowie or from author George Denny, then there is no charge for shipping, otherwise the shipping costs an additional $5.

Historic Preservation Month Reception, 2012

This year’s Historic Preservation Month Reception will be held at Ridgeley Rosenwald School, an outstanding example of restoration in Prince George’s County. Constructed in 1927 on land provided to the Board of Education by the Ridgley family, this building remained in the ownership of the Board of Education after it closed as a school in the 1960s, and was then used as the school-bus dispatch office for the County’s public schools. Over the last seven years, interested citizens and organizations have worked toward the restoration of the building, and it opened as a museum and community meeting place in September 2011. We will celebrate this very special restoration success at the school on May 16, 2012.

The Ridgeley School (Colored School #1 in Election District #13) was built in 1927, one of four two-teacher schools in Prince George’s County funded in that year by the Julius Rosenwald Fund. Before this school was built, classes for elementary students had been held in the “colored hall” or “society hall” which stood on the lot immediately adjoining to the east. The hall was informally connected with Ridgley Methodist Episcopal Church, located a short distance to the east on the north side of Central Avenue. The first church on this site had been erected in the 1870s, on land which was deeded to Lewis Ridgley and two other black trustees out of the Berry family land holdings. By the 1890s a small community had developed in this area; its focal points were Ridgley Church, the lodge, and, later, the adjoining schoolhouse. (The spelling of the Ridgley name varies; the restored schoolhouse will be known as Ridgeley School.)

In the 1923/24 academic year, there were 42 elementary schools for black children in Prince George’s County. In that year a committee of the Colored Public School Trustees Association conducted a survey of the County’s colored public schools, in which it was recorded that a new Rosenwald school was being requested for the Ridgley community. “It is already on the program to build a new Rosenwald school at Ridgeley. The committee can only say that it is urgently needed.” The committee went on to encourage the Ridgley community members to pursue their hopes for a new school building, and not to “let up in their drive till the new building is finished, fully equipped and every child has a comfortable seat in which to study.” Six Prince George’s County schools were built with Rosenwald support in the 1925/26 year, and four more, including Ridgeley, would be completed in 1926/27.

A formal request was addressed to the Board of Education in March 1926 for a new school for Ridgley, but the Ridgley delegation was informed that their request came too late to put in that year’s budget. The Board agreed, however, to support the request if the community would furnish two acres of land for the proposed school. Accordingly, in February 1927, Mary Eliza Ridgeley (daughter-in-law of Lewis Ridgley, who had founded the nearby Methodist church) offered 2 acres of the family’s property to the Board for the construction of the school, and the offer was accepted.

At its meeting in June 1927, the Board of Education contracted with Burton A. Ford to erect three colored schools - $4,281.54 for a school at Ridgley, the same amount for a school of the same plan at Clinton, and $4,221.54 for a different design at Collington. The deed of land from the Ridgeleys was executed two weeks later. This land lay on the south side of Central Avenue a short distance west of the church, with a right-of-way to the avenue.

Juneteenth is celebrated in more than 200 cities in the United States to commemorate the final announcement in Galveston, Texas, of the emancipation of slaves some two years after the original proclamation. From that day until this, there have been celebrations throughout the United States to mark the date, June 19, 1865, when the last enslaved persons learned of their freedom. Juneteenth, as it came to be called, is a national holiday in 12 states and the District of Columbia.

Papers in the Rosenwald Fund Archives record that the school was of the two-teacher plan, that the total cost of its construction was $5,300, of which the largest part ($4,400) came from public taxation, $200 was contributed by the local black community, and $700 came from the Rosenwald Fund. Ridgeley School opened in the fall of 1927, with two large classrooms, each of which served at least three grade levels. Instruction in home economics and in vocational carpentry was offered in the central passage between the two classrooms. Two privies stood on the two-acre property, as well as space for sports and games. Members of the Ridgeley family remained very much involved in the affairs of the school.

Within twenty years of the opening of the Ridgeley School, the rear (south) addition was constructed, adding a third large classroom. Later, until 1957, the schoolhouse served as a special center for children with special needs. From 1963 until 2009, the building served as the school-bus management office for the Prince George’s County Public Schools. By 2002, when the National Trust brought attention to Rosenwald schools through their listing among the nation’s Most Endangered Buildings, the Ridgeley school was in deteriorating condition, but was recognized as being Prince George’s County’s Rosenwald school closest to its original condition. In 2004, a committee formed with the express purpose of bringing about the preservation and restoration of the schoolhouse. Restoration of the building was accomplished through an agreement between the Board of Education and the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission, and the work was carried out by the Oak Grove Restoration Company. The building was opened to the public in September 2011 as a museum and educational meeting place.

The Prince George’s County Historical Society will be the principal sponsor of the Preservation Reception this year, assisted by many other County organizations. We will celebrate together at Ridgeley School on Wednesday, May 16, from 6 to 8 PM, with tours and information about Ridgeley, light refreshments, the awarding of Historic Preservation plaques, and exhibits by history- and preservation-oriented organizations. The evening is free. If you plan to attend, please RSVP by May 11, 2012, by calling 301-864-0420 or email riversdale@pgparks.com. We look forward to seeing you at the Ridgeley Rosenwald School on May 16!

Their 2012 inductee is the Society’s own Frederick S. DeMarr (1928-1997). Fred was long known as “Mr. Prince George’s County History,” and served as the Society’s president from 1972 to 1984. He was instrumental in starting this newsletter, and was the creator of the Society’s library. The Frederick S. DeMarr Library of County History, located in the lower level of the Greenbelt Public Library, is his legacy.

HISTORY IN THE MAKING

Prince George’s County Historical & Cultural Trust, in partnership with Prince George’s Heritage Inc., Anacostia Trails Heritage Area Inc., and the African American Heritage Preservation Group, seeks to engage the citizens of Prince George’s County, Maryland, in an ongoing dialogue on the impact of history in their community and the importance of heritage preservation at all levels of civil society. We seek to bring together citizens, preservation advocates, municipal and county government leaders, non-profit organizations and other stakeholders in a variety of settings to discuss the impact of heritage issues in the community and the best means for interpreting and honoring that legacy.

The main part of this program is a series of community conversations. These events will help direct how the preservation community and elected officials should celebrate and interpret the rich cultural legacy of Prince George’s County in ways that are lasting and meaningful for everyone. With the upcoming anniversaries of the War of 1812, the Emancipation Proclamation, and post-Civil War reconstruction just around the corner, how should we focus our energies and limited resources?

We hope to share and learn more about some of the rich history that surrounds us and to spur a lively dialogue with all participants. The information generated will be captured in on-line surveys, participant questionnaires, and recorded onsite to create a robust record of responses to be shared with civic leaders and all members of the heritage preservation community.

The next public forums are May 23rd at Oxon Hill Manor in Oxon Hill, MD, and June 20th at Darnall’s Chance in Upper Marlboro, MD. The doors open at 6 PM and the program is from 6:30 to 8 PM.

PROJECT LEADS TO NATIONAL RECOGNITION

In 2010, the Surratt Society embarked on a project to fund a tombstone for Elizabeth Keckly, a remarkable woman who bought her freedom from slavery (and that of her son) through her talents as a designer and seamstress. She went on to be employed by many of the ladies of high society in Washington, D.C. before the Civil War. Because of her skills, she was introduced to First Lady Mary Lincoln and became not only her modiste, but also a close confidante during the crucial years of the war. Her later book, Behind The Scenes, became a valuable tool for researchers studying the Lincolns’ years in the White House.

Because of the publicity generated by the dedication of Mrs. Keckly’s marker at the National Harmony Memorial Park in Landover, Maryland, the staff at Surratt House Museum was contacted by the National Park Service’s National Underground Railroad Network to Freedom Initiative. They were asked to apply for Mrs. Keckly’s gravesite to be included in the program because of the tremendous efforts that the lady had made in assisting contraband during and after the war. The newly freed people needed shelter, clothing, and food, and Mrs. Keckly worked with Frederick Douglass, Mrs. Lincoln, and churches and civic groups to aid in this endeavor.

Mrs. Sandra Walia, research librarian for the Surratt House Museum’s James O. Hall Research Center, prepared the necessary papers; and on March 16, 2012, she and the museum staff and members were pleased to receive notice that the application had been approved and that Mrs. Elizabeth Keckly will be honored with inclusion in the Network to Freedom program.

How do I tell you about Fred DeMarr? I have given quite a few speeches in the past for inductions of Prince Georgians into the County Hall of Fame – outstanding historic figures, governors, movers-and-shakers, from the eighteenth, nineteenth, and early twentieth centuries who made their significant contributions to our county’s history generations before us.

But this is so different, and to me much more difficult. Most of us here knew Fred and loved him – some of you are even related to him - we spent countless hours talking to him, working with him, attending affairs like this with him. He was for so many years the face and the voice of the Prince George’s County Historical Society, a legend in his own right. How on earth do I talk to you about Fred DeMarr?

I will try . . .

Frederick Stanley DeMarr was born in Mount Rainier, in February 1928. His father was Joseph DeMarr from Woodville, Aquasco - his mother was Elizabeth Roeder of Upper Marlboro. Very shortly after Fred was born, his father built a Sears, Roebuck house in Berwyn and it was there that he spent his childhood.

He attended Berwyn elementary school, and graduated from Hyattsville High School in 1945 as class president. He graduated from the University of Maryland (where he was active in the Sigma Chi fraternity) in June 1949 with a B.A. in Government and Politics, and received an M.A. (also in Government and Politics) in June 1954.

After college Fred taught at U.S. military installations in Germany, Greenland, Labrador, and Newfoundland through what was just then developing as the University College of the University of Maryland.

In the 1960s he served as dean of students at C.W. Post College and then Hofstra University on Long Island, NY.

Fred returned to Maryland in 1970, and became administrator of the Student Union, where he remained till retiring in 1995.

After he returned to Maryland, Fred became very active in the PGCHS, and served as our president from 1972-84. He began the Society newsletter, News & Notes, in 1973, and at about the same time initiated the tradition of celebrating St. George’s Day, the anniversary of the establishment of Prince George’s County on 23 April 1696. Fred served on the Prince George’s County Historical and Cultural Trust, and on the Hall of Fame; he was an advisor to the Jaycees during their restoration of the George Washington House in 1976. In the early ‘80s he served on the advisory committee in the development of the Historic Sites and Districts Plan which initiated the County’s Preservation Program.

Fred was an inveterate collector of written material, and his masses of books and other materials on Prince George’s and Maryland history formed an actual library, which he generously shared with anyone who wanted or needed information. This library moved from wherever the Historical Society happened to have its headquarters at the time - Montpelier to Riversdale to Marietta - and wherever it was, Fred spent as much time as he could with it, regaling visitors with his extensive knowledge of just about everything Prince Georgian. All kinds of people visited, were fascinated, and learned – and came back to learn more. He became something of a legend – truly “Mr. Prince George’s County History”!

ROSENWALD SCHOOL CONFERENCE AT TUSKEGEE UNIVERSITY

Two years ago, with grant funding from the state of Maryland and the sponsorship of our Historical Society, I completed a two-year study of the 156 Rosenwald schools in Maryland – schools for African-American students, built between 1918 and 1932 in 15 southern states with financial support from the Julius Rosenwald Fund. From June 13 to 16 this year, I attended a special National Trust for Historic Preservation conference on Rosenwald schools, and presented the results of the Maryland study. The conference was held at Tuskegee University in Tuskegee, Alabama.

The conference was a lively gathering of approximately 340 people who have attended, researched, worked on, and/or had a special interest in Rosenwald schools, and it was a wonderful experience! Tuskegee is an absolutely inspiring place, and I made sure to walk all around the beautiful historic nucleus of the campus, which is itself a National Historic Landmark. Reminiscences of its founder, Booker T. Washington, and its most famous scholar, George Washington Carver, are everywhere. The conference offered sessions about ongoing state-surveys of the schools, tips on funding and preservation, research sources, individual school stories, presentations on Rosenwald, Washington, and other individuals who were critically involved in the beginnings of the Rosenwald project, and much more. The only problem was that there were so many interesting concurrent sessions that it was impossible to attend every one that I wanted to.

My presentation on the Rosenwald schools of Maryland was part of a panel with surveyors from Arkansas and Mississippi, and the comparisons among our three states were very interesting. We are fortunate that in Maryland 53 (just over one third) of the 156 Rosenwald schools survive. In each of Arkansas and Mississippi, only about two dozen schools are known to survive out of a total of approximately 340 in Arkansas and 560 in Mississippi – only 7% and 4% survival rate in Arkansas and Mississippi, respectively. I learned that in North Carolina, which at 787 had the largest number of Rosenwald schools, only approximately 160, or 20%, are known to survive. Georgia has a slightly better survival rate – 51 out of 242, or 21%. Kentucky comes closest to our percentage of survivals, with 40 schools surviving out of 155, or 26 percent. As other states complete their surveys, we will have a better idea of the total number of still-standing Rosenwald schoolhouses, and perhaps we can understand the factors that affected the wide variety in survival rates. Although the majority of the Rosenwald schools in Maryland were in rural areas when they were built, Maryland has seen more growth around their locations, and the consequent conversion of the schoolhouses into residences, church halls, or community centers. Schools in the Deep South, however, often stood nearly alone in vast agricultural areas, and the land was considered too valuable to maintain a small structure on it.

I was fortunate to be able to spend a couple of hours in the impressive Tuskegee Archives. I went through several boxes (only a fraction) of the numerous Clinton Calloway papers – Calloway was the Director of the Extension Department at Tuskegee, and it was he who received applications for Rosenwald funding and was responsible for the logistics of the funding and construction. I was interested in the connection between Clinton Calloway and his brother Thomas Junius Calloway, who was a Washington, D.C., attorney and land developer. Thomas Junius developed and resided in the community of Lincoln in Prince George’s County; he facilitated the construction of the “Buena Vista” Rosenwald School in Lincoln in 1921 and became its first principal. Although I read through a number of letters between the brothers, I did not find what I had hoped for, i.e., correspondence specifically about the Lincoln school, which was surprisingly large and well equipped. I may be tempted to return to Tuskegee after the entire Calloway collection is completely processed.

Tiffany Williams Jennings, my colleague at the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission, attended the Tuskegee conference, and Tiffany prepared and explained her large poster on the restoration of the Ridgeley School, where we celebrated Historic Preservation Month on May 16. Also attending were two other members of the Delta Sigma Theta sorority who are now acting as docents at Ridgeley School. Other Marylanders in attendance represented the Banneker-Douglass Museum, and the Maryland Commission on African American History and Culture. Peter Ascoli, grandson of Julius Rosenwald, who spoke to us here in Prince George’s County in 2007 about his grandfather’s work with Booker T. Washington and the resulting Rosenwald School project, spoke at the conference’s plenary session, as did his cousin Alice Rosenwald. The session ended with a long and emotional standing ovation when Alice Rosenwald announced her $100,000 donation to the National Trust for the research and restoration of Rosenwald Schools.

The excellence of the conference and the experience of time spent at Tuskegee will certainly be a highlight of my work in 2012, and I am grateful and proud that the Prince George’s County Historical Society played a part in this worthwhile project!

PRINCE GEORGE’S COUNTY HISTORY AND PRESERVATION ALLIANCE

About four years ago, the Historical Society started talking about the plethora of organizations, commissions, and associations that were involved with the preservation and history of Prince George’s County. Though there have been and continue to be many activities throughout the years at which historical and/or preservation buffs could meet, there had never been an organized effort to bring the groups together to synchronize calendars and activities.

The Historical Society invited over 50 groups to participate in a meeting on April 14 at Marietta House Museum to see if there was any interest among us to form such an entity. After discussion among the participants, it was determined that this was a great idea and the Prince George’s County History and Preservation Alliance was born.

The agreed purpose of the alliance is three-fold: (1) to partner in programs to increase public participation; (2) to establish stronger voices in our communities, county and state; and (3) to coordinate our calendars so that individuals could attend more of the enriching events presented.

The dialogue has begun and we plan to meet on a quarterly basis. We are beginning to learn about each other, coordinate our calendars, invite each other to activities, and coalesce around common issues.

If someone from your organization was not able to make this first meeting, please join us the next time. If you didn’t receive an invitation and would like to participate, please provide contact information so that we can include you in the next meeting. Please send an email to pgchsmembers@hotmail.com with the subject: Next Prince George’s Alliance Meeting.
He had some quirks – he couldn’t stand the thought of computerizing the library. Who needed it? He knew where everything was. As he said often, the best thing to do with a computer was to take a hammer to it!

I had one little quarrel with Fred – he was too generous and trusting! He would let almost anyone borrow materials from his library (and some of those things never came back, as we learned years later). On the rare occasions when I let him talk me into borrowing something, I insisted on writing for him a dated IOU – but after his death I found some of those IOUs, crumpled up and thrown trustingly into the trash . . .

His death in September 1997 was sudden, untimely, and utterly unexpected – and for a while disbelieved. After we got over the initial shock, we determined that we would take loving care of his library – and went to work to do the best we could with it. His family fully supported the effort, with generous donations from members of his family. The library was legally transferred to the Historical Society by Fred’s sister, Louise Tatspaugh (our library “angel”) and the Society is working hard to continue its very important use and work. It is Fred’s legacy!

Fred would be very happy, I think, because his library (the Frederick S. DeMarr Library of County History) is still achieving something that Fred regularly accomplished without even knowing or trying; all the people who spent time with him in his library would walk out smiling, because they would leave his library having learned something interesting that they had never expected to discover. With hard work by a number of individuals, AND (sorry Fred!) a lot of help from electronic accessioning, e-mail, and the web, we are determined to continue that tradition - to continue the legacy of Fred DeMarr.

I can think of no-one who more completely fulfills the criteria - of creativity and contribution to Prince George’s County - for induction into the Prince George’s County Hall of Fame. I am honored to present to you our own Frederick Stanley DeMarr.

HISTORY REMEMBERED – AND MARKED

In April of 2011, The American Film Company and director Robert Redford released The Conspirator, a film which focused on the trial of Prince George’s native and accused assassination conspirator, Mary E. Surratt, as portrayed by actress Robin Wright. The male lead was played by James McAvoy, serving as defense lawyer Frederick A. Aiken – a wounded Union soldier of the Civil War who returned to civilian life to face an even greater challenge as he faced a military court trying the conspirators in the assassination of Abraham Lincoln.

The untested lawyer faced insurmountable odds during a time of turmoil at war’s end. Despite the barriers placed in his way, Aiken’s summation speech in defense of Mrs. Surratt is regarded by many as one of the greatest speeches in American history.

In the course of assisting with the movie’s production, the staff and researchers at Surratt House Museum found that Frederick Aiken has been in an unmarked grave in Georgetown’s historic Oak Hill Cemetery since his early death in 1878. The Surratt Society began a fund-raising campaign; and on the afternoon of June 14, 2012, a ceremony was held at Oak Hill to dedicate the tombstone which now marks the grave. The inscription on the stone is the opening lines of his summation speech in defense of Mary E. Surratt.

*For the lawyer as well as the soldier, there is an equally pleasant duty –
An equally imperative command.
That duty is to shelter from injustice and wrong the innocent,
To protect the weak from oppression.*
WHAT’S GOING ON WITH THE TOBACCO BARN?

Have you been to the farm lately? What’s going on with the Tobacco Barn?

If you have walked around the National Colonial Farm lately you may have noticed something a little off. The tobacco barn is looking a little less than colonial lately as it gets a bit of a face lift—or a “sill” lift if you will.

The tobacco barn, like most 18th century buildings I’m sure, has endured its fair share of wear and tear. This is not the first time the barn has had to be repaired and it certainly will not be the last. This time, it seems the old sill has rotted through and the beam that is being taken out—a replacement itself—due to weather over time, needs to be replaced again. The replacement sill is being installed through an intricate process requiring the whole barn to be lifted up off of the old sill while the new one is carefully put in its place. If this was an issue back in the 1770s, barn owners would just have built a new barn rather than replaced a beam. They did not have the tools or technology to lift the whole barn to replace this one piece. Oh, the modern ways of historic preservation.

The repair work is being done by our good friend, Jeff Thompson from Colonial Woodwrights, a preservation consultant company in Aquasco, Maryland. Jeff and his team won a Historic Preservation Award in 2010 for their work on the Mackall Barn at Historic St. Mary’s City. The project is being overseen by our own National Colonial Farm manager, Matt Mattingly, who invites everyone to come by and see this exciting project in action.

Historic preservation has been a cornerstone of the Accokeek Foundation’s mission since its founding over 50 years ago. Francis Bolton, Robert Ware Strauss, Henry Ferguson, and Charles Wagner saw a need to preserve this land and George Washington’s view. They did so partly by engaging the surrounding community to get involved in learning the importance of preserving history for a better future.

This vision continues here this summer. Not only is the Tobacco Barn being restored, but thanks to a generous grant from the Daughters of the American Revolution our beloved Laurel Branch house will also be getting a midsummer make over. The clapboards on the exterior southside of the house, as well as some surrounding fencing will be replaced. It will be an exciting summer for the Accokeek Foundation and for preserving the history of Southern Maryland.

PRINCE OF A COUNTY 2012

The Prince George’s County Historical Society is fortunate to be able to celebrate its annual reception and fundraising event at a beautiful Queen Anne style house in the community of Riverdale Park. This year’s Prince of a County event will be held at the Warren House, on Sunday, September 23, 2012.

The Warren house is a 2-1/2-story, hip and gable-roofed frame house which features a variety of fine details; an oriel window, projecting bays, and gables decorated with Queen Anne style shingle. A two-story semi-octagonal projecting bay lights the south façade, and is surmounted at third level by a pediment decorated with fish-scale shingles. The south façade is sheltered by a one-story porch, the principal opening of which is surmounted by a steep gable filled with raised geometric design. The side elevations of the house are varied by contrasting details: on the west an oriel window at second-story level, and on the east two asymmetrical cross-gables at third-story level.

This handsome house was built circa 1913 from a design very close to that of the Lewis Holden House, built more than a decade earlier in Hyattsville. The Warren House reflected the change in taste over the years between the construction of the two houses. While the Holden House was highlighted by Queen Anne style panels in its large oriel window, and a sleeping porch with turned balusters and spindle frieze, the Warren House had a more classical appearance with its pedimented gables and dentillated cornices. The Warren House was built for the family of Claude Warren, who served as Mayor of Riverdale from 1953 until his death in 1964. It is now the home of our host, Michael Herman, who also served as Mayor of Riverdale - from 2001 to 2003. A prominent and handsome landmark in the town of Riverdale Park, the Warren House will make a beautiful setting for this year’s Prince of a County celebration. If you have not received an invitation, call Susan Pearl at 301-262-3367. We look forward to seeing you at the Warren House on September 23!

Hispanic Heritage Month begins on September 15 and ends on October 15. In 1968, President Lyndon B. Johnson proclaimed a week in September as Hispanic Heritage Week. Twenty years later, President Ronald R. Reagan expanded the period to Hispanic Heritage Month. The month marks a period dedicated to recognizing the contributions of Hispanic and Latino Americans and for celebrating their vibrant cultures.

The beginning date reflects the date on which Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua all declared their independence from Spain in 1821. In addition, Mexico celebrates independence on September 16, Chile on September 18, and Belize on September 21.

The Prince George’s County Historical Society will celebrate Hispanic Heritage this year with a visit from the National Park Service’s Chief of Interpretation and Education. Ms. Marta Cruz Kelly will introduce the Park Service’s recent publication “Hispanics and the Civil War: From Battlefield to Homefront”. With Ms. Kelly’s guidance, we will explore the many and often untold stories of Hispanic men and women who bore arms or in other ways supported the war effort during the period 1861-1865. An excerpt may be found at the following website: http://www.nps.gov/resources/story.htm?id=235. Of special interest may be the information about a certain USN admiral for whom two of Washington’s metro stations are named.

Marta Cruz Kelly was named national Chief of Interpretation and Education in November 2010. For thirty years prior to her current appointment, “she (has) designed and managed large-scale education and civic engagement programs incorporating partnerships and cutting edge technology” according to National Park Service Director Jonathan Jarvis. Kelly now oversees all National Park Service interpretive services, including education programs, community outreach, planning, employee training, cooperating associations, and the volunteer-in-parks program. She provides guidance to 5,100 permanent and seasonal interpreters and 196,000 volunteers. In 2009, 173 million people participated in National Park Service interpretive activities.

Kelly’s other National Park Service experience includes serving as the site manager at Mary MacLeod Bethune National Historic Site in Washington, DC, as a training manager at Albright Learning Center located in Grand Canyon National Park in Arizona, and as superintendent of New Orleans Jazz National Historical Park.

After the lecture, please join us for an informal gathering to enjoy authentic Mexican food at Taco Rico, 4811 Edmonston Road in Hyattsville. We will begin gathering at 4:30 PM with dinner at 5 PM. If you plan to attend dinner, please RSVP to Yaremi at yaremi@petrodesignbuild.com or at 301-249-9000, so arrangements can be made with the restaurant for seating.
The National Agricultural Library’s Abraham Lincoln Building (USDA ARS NAL) is located in Beltsville, Maryland, 15 miles northeast of Washington, DC, near the intersection of U.S. Route 1 and Interstates 95 and 495 (Beltway Exit 25-North). The Library occupies a 14-story building on the grounds of USDA’s Beltsville Agricultural Research Center (BARC). On May 15, 1862, Abraham Lincoln signed into law the Agricultural Act that established the U.S. Department of Agriculture. The newly created Department of Agriculture and the Secretary of Agriculture were and are charged with the duty “to acquire and preserve in his Department all information concerning agriculture which he can obtain by means of books and correspondence.” In 1864, USDA received appropriations that included for $4,000 for the library and laboratory. Today, the National Agricultural Library is one of five national libraries of the United States. It houses one of the world’s largest and most accessible agricultural information collections, if not indeed the largest and serves as the nexus for a national network of state land-grant and U.S. Department of Agriculture field libraries. In fiscal year 2011 (Oct 2010 through Sept 2011) NAL delivered more than 100 million direct customer service transactions.

The Special Collections of USDA ARS NAL houses rare books including Fuchs and Linnaeus originals, manuscript collections, nearly 300,000 nursery and seed trade catalogs, photographs, and posters including original Smokey the Bear art work, and books, paintings and art from the 1500s to the present. Materials cover a variety of agricultural subjects including horticulture, entomology, poultry sciences, natural history, and are not limited to domestic publications. As part of the United States Department of Agriculture (USDA) and the Agricultural Research Service (ARS), Special Collections at the National Agricultural Library is charged with arranging, describing, preserving and making available rare materials significant to the history of agriculture and the USDA.

"More than 100 white boxes fill shelf after shelf of the fifth floor at the National Agricultural Library (NAL), sheltering secrets of U.S. Department of Agriculture parasite investigations from 1886 to 1987. The boxes are filled with line drawings, photographs, lantern slides, research notes, documents, and correspondence that represent the early history of parasitology work, especially in taxonomy and systematics, conducted over the past 100 years and more by USDA scientists."

Fast Facts:
- Time period: 1886 to 1942, with the majority created between 1894 and 1916.
- Content: 7,584 watercolor paintings, lithographs and line drawings, including 3,807 images of apples.
- Fruit origins: The plant specimens illustrated originated in 29 countries and 51 states and territories in the U.S.

FROM THE DIARY OF JOHN WILLIAM BURROUGHS

The Historical Society recently bought the diaries written by John William Burroughs in 1861, 1862, and 1863. I have been working my way through this wonderful source, transcribing and researching context. The Burroughs family lived at Waverly, and were parishioners at St. Thomas’ Church in the nearby village of Croom. John Burroughs served on the Vestry of St. Thomas’, and often wrote of his attendance at the church services – this account from 150 years ago is a particularly delightful one, unexpectedly whimsical in the midst of the tragic war news that he was faced with every day.

Sunday, March 2, 1862

"Communion day, and plenty of singing, a very unusual thing in our little church . . . . The quality - as I am not a musician, I will not judge - it is enough however to say it was sufficiently loud - if there were any slumbering insects laid away in the old brick awaiting the approach of genial warmth of the summer sun to bring them to life, they were probably prematurely aroused to meet an unwelcome (to them) snow, which we found rapidly falling after service. At any rate we all got home safely with our hearing unimpaired . . ."

This autumn and winter, the Prince George’s County Library is hosting “Journey Stories,” the traveling tales of Americans on the move through history. This wide-ranging project is made possible by the Prince George’s Arts & Humanities Council in partnership with the Prince County Memorial Library System, the Maryland Humanities Council, and the Smithsonian Institute Traveling Exhibition Service.

A special “Journey Stories” exhibit will be mounted at the Oxon Hill Library between December 7, 2012 and January 18, 2013; Prince George’s County is one of only five communities in Maryland selected to host this national exhibit. Associated lectures, programs, workshops, and other educational opportunities are being offered in various places in Prince George’s County in conjunction with the exhibit, beginning in October 2012 and continuing into the months after the exhibit closes in January. These programs illustrate very different types of journeys on a wide range of themes: art, history, transportation, education, diversity, and destinations. The Prince George’s County Historical Society has joined in assisting and co-sponsoring this project by offering and promoting three programs: first, in honor of October’s Hispanic Heritage Month, we sponsored a program at the New Carrollton Library, at which Marta Cruz Kelly, National Director of Interpretation and Education for the National Park Service, introduced the Park Service’s recent publication Hispanics and the Civil War: From Battle Field to Home Front. Also in October, at the Hyattsville Library, PGCHS historian Susan Pearl lectured on her recent study of the Rosenwald schools of Maryland, and the historic cooperative effort between Booker T. Washington and Julius Rosenwald toward progress in African-American education. On November 13, at the Greenbelt Library, Ms. Pearl will speak about the travels in Prince George’s County of painter Charles Willson Peale (1741-1827) and other artistic members of his family – through their portraits we have come to know the faces of many leading figures in America’s early history. In addition to the portraits of governors, generals, and other prominent Prince Georgians, her talk will highlight Peale’s 1819 portrait of Yarrow Mamout, possibly our country’s earliest and most significant portrait of an African American.

Historical Society members are encouraged to visit the exhibit at Oxon Hill Library – it explores immigration, migration, and transportation across the United States, and features 3-D imagery, graphic display panels, audio components, and reproductions of period artifacts – and to participate in as many as possible of the associated programs. Dates and details of the “Journey Stories” project are spelled out in the Fall 2012 issue of the library’s CURRENT News & Events, available now at all of the County’s library branches. You can find online information by going to the Library System’s home page at pgcmls.info. Once there, find the drop-down menu Events Calendar at the top of the webpage and scroll down to “Journey Stories Part I.”
OUR LIBRARY ON THE WEB!

On Saturday, October 6, it started out to be a fairly ordinary “Saturday afternoon at the Fred DeMarr Library of County History,” but things changed quickly. Photographer Eric Zhang came in and told us that he is in the process of creating a year-long photo weblog of Greenbelt – illustrating all aspects of Greenbelt from January to December 2012, the city’s 75th anniversary year. Because our Historical Society library is located in Greenbelt, he wanted to photograph and record information about it. We took him on a tour of the library, expecting just a few shots and a few explanations, and were pleasantly surprised at the depth of his interest. He photographed examples of just about everything in the library, and more than two hours later, bade us farewell, telling us that a detailed photographic tour of our library would soon appear on his blog.

It was fortunate that we didn’t have very many researchers that Saturday, because we were able to show him quite a variety of resources, and the result may turn out to be a very good thing for our library! The complete tour is now available for you to view - check it out at greenbelt2012.wordpress.com. Eric’s blog is arranged chronologically. Scroll down to October 6 and you’ll find the entry entitled “Prince George’s County Historical Society Library”.

MELWOOD PARK

The Historical Society is concerned about the condition and future of one its most historic buildings. Melwood Park will be a topic of discussion at the November Historic Preservation Commission meeting. Following is a brief history of the property.

Melwood Park is a multi-section, multi-period brick plantation house. It is of outstanding historical significance, having been the home of the prominent Digges family in the 18th and early 19th centuries, and frequently visited by George Washington. It is a unique combination of Colonial/Georgian and Federal-style architecture, with some very early decorative features still surviving. Melwood Park was listed in the National Register of Historic Places in 1976.

The earliest dwelling was built by William Digges, probably around 1730 when he purchased 550 acres of the Melwood Park tract. William Digges died in 1740, devising his plantation to his widow, Eleanor Brooke Digges, and after her death to his son, Ignatius Digges.

The Digges family was Roman Catholic, and maintained a chapel, possibly in one of the rooms of the house. Rev. Thomas Digges offered regular private masses, which were attended by local Catholics during this period when Catholics were not permitted public worship. Thomas Sim Lee, elected governor of Maryland in 1779, was one of the prominent personalities who lived at Melwood Park. He and his wife were active in providing supplies to the American troops during the American Revolution. The Melwood area was a center of activity in the summer of 1814. After a brief skirmish with American troops, the British under General Robert Ross camped nearby on 23/24 August 1814.

The property was sold in 1834 to William Pumphrey and was the family home for several generations. Ownership changed several times in the 20th century and has for many years been uninhabited. Now in seriously deteriorated condition, the house at Melwood Park is, however, salvageable and restorable, and is certainly one of the County’s most worthy candidates for preservation and restoration.

PEACE CROSS

Since Peace Cross in Bladensburg is currently in the news and because of its commemoration to those Prince George’s County residents who lost their lives during World War I while serving in the Armed Forces, we thought it was appropriate to provide a brief history of the monument in honor of Veterans Day.

It is significant because of its historical association and the impact of World War I on the County. The impetus for the Cross came from the Prince George’s County Memorial Committee, formed for the purpose of raising funds for the construction of a monument honoring the County’s war dead. The monument was placed on what was, in the 18th century, the Public Landing for the busy port of Bladensburg. Ground was broken for the memorial in September of 1919. This also marked the dedication of a new road between Bladensburg and Annapolis, to be named the National Defense Highway in honor of the men lost in the war, and now known as MD 450. In 1922 the Commissioners of Bladensburg conveyed the Peace Cross site and the unfinished Cross to the Snyder-Farmer Post of the American Legion; on July 12, 1925, dedication ceremonies were held for the Peace Cross, constructed at a cost of $10,000 and designed by John J. Earley of Washington, DC. In 1956, a longstanding controversy over ownership was settled by a Circuit Court ruling that title should be vested in the State of Maryland. The land was deeded to the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission in 1960, after which that agency carried out restoration work on the monument.

The Cross is 40 feet high, with arms extending 5 feet from the center. Its basic materials are precast reinforced concrete, exposed aggregate and pink granite aggregate. The letters “U.S.” have been placed in the middle of the star. At the foot of the Cross and on each side, are inscribed the words “Endurance”, “Valor”, “Devotion”, and “Courage”. A bronze tablet on the south face carries the names of the 49 residents of the County who died in WWI.
MARYLAND’S ORIGINAL “TEA PARTY”

Since about 2009 there’s been much said and written of new political factions, mostly out West, that say they stand for real, fundamental conservatism. Members and advocates of the “Tea Party” movement oppose government, centralized in particular, in nearly all aspects, especially tax levy and business regulation, and also in private matters, “Christian” and other. Government action, especially if it’s federal, comes in for constant Tea Party condemnation.

What’s in the Tea Party title, though? How close do they come, really, to their colonial namesakes, in spirit or action?

Colonial Tea Party, 1773-75

In early America the Tea Party label – a name coined and used after 1825 to commemorate Boston’s rebellious mob action – referred of course to the December 1773 events, in and around Boston Harbor, not to a political group. Those actions helped spark the American Revolution, and modern Tea Partiers apparently take inspiration from them.

In Maryland the events of the 1770s, before the Revolution, all came during the tenure of Robert Eden, her last royal governor. Eden arrived from London in June 1769, after radical colonial leaders – in Virginia, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts – had taken firm positions, in their legislatures and through merchants’ associations, opposing Great Britain’s taxing powers and business controls. Crown officials, for George III, and the Lord Proprietor, the sixth (and last) Lord Baltimore, issued Eden detailed instructions, generally keeping to proprietor and mother country their monopolies on appointment of all officials – from clerks to port wardens to judges – as well as the setting of official fees (highly controversial, in Maryland) and the regulation of all shipping in and out of the colony.

The Tea Party actions, starting in Massachusetts and concluding in Maryland, arose from popular feeling or, more accurately, mob fervor. The common patriot line founded Tea Party opinion on universal resentment of British taxation and merchant opposition to the monopoly of the East India Tea Company. But the actions were taken mostly by mob rule, not thoughtful politics.

The Boston Harbor happening, in 1773, came on a dark December eve after a patriots’ meeting at Faneuil Hall, led by Samuel Adams. (Adams did not then urge his group to go after the tea, but later defended its destruction.) The “party” saw a leaderless congregation, in high spirits, disguised as war-painted Indians, force its way onto three British vessels and dump the contents of hundreds of tea chests into the harbor. Boston for years had been garrisoned by British regulars, essentially in occupation, to enforce royal orders. Parliament, after the Tea Party, added to the punishment with passage of the Boston Port Bill, intended to place the port under a semblance of martial law.

In early 1774 Marylanders heard of these events. The popular assembly, the Lower House, passed resolutions supporting Massachusetts and opposing the port bill. Governor Eden managed through this time to maintain his personal popularity, despite growing opposition to the Crown, and also the Lord Proprietor, whose title by then had devolved, on his death, from the last Lord Baltimore to his illegitimate son. But Eden was powerless to resist the patriot movement. The weakness of royal and proprietor prerogatives was possibly best demonstrated in Annapolis Harbor in 1774 and ’75, with tea party actions following Boston’s.

The burning of the Peggy Stewart is the best known of Maryland’s acts in defiance of Parliament’s Tea Act. It wasn’t the first, though. Before the brig reached Maryland another English vessel, the Mary and Jane, attempted to bring in a tea shipment but was sent back to England, still fully loaded. This mild skirmish between patriots and royal officials was soon followed by the arrival of the Peggy Stewart, in October 1774. By then mob feeling in Annapolis was fully aroused, and the brig was doomed.

Popular and merchant resentment to the Tea Act and British tea imports was then at its height.

The Peggy Stewart owners, Anthony Stewart and his father-in-law, were well aware of the fever pitch of the rabble. Stewart had been hung in effigy on a makeshift scaffold in front of his manor house, a real threat to a man with a pregnant spouse. At first Stewart tried to claim that the 2,320 pounds of tea had come on board without his knowledge, or the shipmaster’s. He then attempted to have all cargo but the tea unloaded, but the port commissioner – another Eden appointee – required the payment of all duties and unloading of all goods, tea and non-tea alike. Stewart, seeing himself in serious straits, personal and commercial, with some possible danger to himself and his family, went public with contrition. He posted a full apology, for himself and his unpopular vessel, and offered to publicly destroy all the tea.
By this time, though, the fever of the mob had taken over, as it had in Boston ten months earlier. Neither the forces of the royal governor nor the propertied citizens of Annapolis could save cargo or vessel. Before an angry throng, heated up by events in Massachusetts and spurred by patriot pamphleteers like the Sons of Liberty, as well as local rumor-mongering, Stewart personally boarded his brig, ran it aground, set fire to its mast and hull, disembarked, and let the flames consume the ship, down to the water’s edge.

The burning of the Peggy Stewart came to be well-storied, in local and colonial legend, and was memorialized later in a famous painting and referred to widely in the popular press. Its notoriety was perhaps aided by the simultaneous holding of the First Continental Congress, in Philadelphia, which concluded just days before the brig was set afire.

Destruction of the Peggy Stewart was followed weeks later in Frederick County, with the fiery consumption of another load of English tea. Then, in July 1775, a fourth tea-laden vessel, the Totness, was run aground near Annapolis and burned, with her cargo. Compared to their Boston brethren, who had merely broken open chests of tea on three British ships and pitched the contents overboard, and who were then punished by a special act of Parliament, Annapolitan patriots proved ambitiously obstreperous, resistive, and destructive. The Marylanders sent home the Mary and Jane with her full load of unwanted tea, then burned up the Peggy Stewart and her East India cargo, then set more tea aflame in Frederick, and finally put the Totness to the fire, with still more tea.

The Aftermath, and the Present

Regardless of what American conservatives today might think of the original Tea Party activists, or their modern counterparts, a few things seem clear. Tea Party acts in and after 1773 were largely the product of mob rule, the sentiments of the unpropertied class, as opposed to concerted conduct founded on principle. Moreover, to the degree that destruction of East India Tea Company property did actually represent true patriot teaching, the Maryland populists, if not those in Boston, certainly took their protests beyond the bounds of reasoned argument.

The tea destruction demonstrations in Maryland and Massachusetts opposing Parliament’s tax were intended mostly as that, inflammatory public statements, literally and figuratively, that British taxes and mercantile controls would no longer be recognized. They were intended to, and did, have the effect of forcing colonists to take sides, for the Tories or the Patriots, with little ground in the middle.

That perhaps is where the colonials and modern Tea Partiers come together. Patriots, Samuel Adams and others, took full public advantage of the Tea Act protests to bring about the movement that led to the successful American Revolution. If some signers of the Declaration of Independence, say, were less than eager to approve the arbitrary destruction of property, they could at least all agree that the Boston events, and those in Maryland, had captured the popular imagination and advanced their cause in a way no pamphlet could.

What modern conservatives have done is much the same, really, in the style of the twenty-first century. They’ve taken a catchy name, one we all vaguely associate with American independence, and commandeered it for their own purposes. The new Tea Partiers of course don’t know that the original ones were mostly rabble, nor do they care. For them it’s enough that they’re associated with colonial patriots who opposed taxation and big government.
